Joint Parenting Alignment Report

Child: Sam

Subject: School / Education

Participants: Ann / Jordan

September 02, 2026

---

1. Purpose of This Report

This report compares the independently provided perspectives of both parents. It is designed to identify areas of shared understanding, differences in perspective, and subjects that may benefit from additional discussion or professional assistance. It is not designed to determine which parent is right or wrong.

2. What Both Parents Agree About

Strong Alignment — both parents indicated that:

- Both parents mentioned "predictable, routines, support" when describing child's primary need.
- Both parents mentioned "attendance, teacher" when describing what is working.
- Both parents mentioned "homework" when describing concerns.
- Both parents mentioned "homework" when describing desired improvements.
- Both parents mentioned "teacher" when describing options you would consider.
- Both parents mentioned "homework" when describing the other parent's likely concerns.

3. Where the Parents See Things Differently

No significant differences in perspective were identified.

4. Child's Identified Needs

Based upon both parents' responses, the report identifies several possible shared needs:

- Consistency between homes
- Academic support
- Predictable expectations
- Communication between homes
- Communication with the school

5. Alignment Map

Subject	Alignment
Child's Primary Need	Strong alignment
What Is Working	Strong alignment
Concerns	Moderate alignment
Desired Improvements	Moderate alignment
Options You Would Consider	Moderate alignment
The Other Parent's Likely Concerns	Moderate alignment

6. Areas for Conversation

- When should homework ordinarily be completed?
- Should tutoring be considered?
- How will school information be exchanged?
- Should both parents attend conferences?

- What information requires immediate communication?

7. Options and Resources

Neutral options — SA CoParents does not decide; it builds options:

Option A: Homework immediately after school.

Option B: A 30-minute transition period followed by homework.

Option C: A completion deadline while allowing each household flexibility regarding timing.

8. Potential Areas of Alignment

> Both parents appear aligned around the goal of supporting Sam regarding school / education. Although they currently describe different perspectives in some areas, both parents agree that Sam's needs come first and that working toward a shared understanding is worthwhile.

9. Questions for the Parents

> Could the parents agree on the outcome without requiring identical household routines?

> What information should always be shared between households?

> Are there school professionals who could provide additional information?

> Would a teacher conference help resolve the remaining differences?

10. Possible Next Steps

- Continue Parent Discussion
- Discuss With Mediator
- Consult Teacher / School Counselor
- Consult Child's Professional
- Develop Written Parenting Protocol
- Create Another Joint Report

Alignment Before Agreement

You don't have to see everything the same way to begin working toward meeting your child's needs.

"We value the parenting system by how well it supports the child, not by how friendly the adults appear."
