Your Special Needs Co-Parenting Report

Prepared for Alex Sample · 9-section framework

Overall rating: Building Progress

You have real strengths to build on, alongside a handful of sections that would benefit from focused attention. This report highlights the highest-leverage next steps.

Your strengths

- Event Participation

School events and extracurriculars - attendance, coordination, and child-first behaviour.

- Understanding the Child

Your knowledge of your child's strengths, needs, triggers, and what helps them recover from stress.

- Educational Coordination

School participation, accommodations, IEP / 504 involvement, and information sharing about school.

Priority focus areas

- Communication (Needs Improvement)

Why it matters: Communication frequently escalates or breaks down before important information is shared.

First step: Move all non-emergency communication to a written, timestamped channel.

- Healthcare Coordination (Fair)

Why it matters: Medical information doesn't always reach both homes on time.

First step: Ask providers to send appointment summaries to both parents; keep an emergency-info sheet in the child's bag.

- Transition Support (Fair)

Why it matters: Transitions are a recurring source of stress.

First step: Move exchanges to a neutral or school-based location; add visual warnings 24 hours before each exchange.

- Resource Coordination (Fair)

Why it matters: Financial coordination is causing occasional gaps in the child's services.

First step: Separate the money question from the child-need question; agree on a written expense procedure.

Communication toolkit

Because Section 6 (Communication) is currently rated Fair or Needs Improvement, these tools are highlighted for you.

- Use BIFF messages

Brief, Informative, Friendly, Firm. Aim for 4 sentences or fewer per message.

- Move to a written channel

Use a shared parenting app or dedicated email thread for all non-emergency communication so it's timestamped.

- Weekly child-focused check-in 10 minutes, same day/time, with a fixed agenda: schedule, health, school, one 'what's working'.

- Delay before responding

Wait 4 hours before replying to any charged message. Draft, save, revise, then send.

- Focus on facts, not feelings, in writing

Move emotional processing to a therapist or trusted friend - keep co-parent communication practical.

Section-by-section detail

Section 1: Understanding the Child

Rating: Good

Your knowledge of your child's strengths, needs, triggers, and what helps them recover from stress.

Findings

- You know a lot; a few areas of your child's world are still coming into focus.

Recommendations

- Ask one of your child's professionals for a plain-language summary of current recommendations.

Section 2: Educational Coordination

Rating: Good

School participation, accommodations, IEP / 504 involvement, and information sharing about school.

Findings

- School coordination mostly works with occasional gaps.

Recommendations

- Ask the school to send communications to both parents; keep a shared school folder for the child.

Section 3: Healthcare Coordination

Rating: Fair

Medical, mental-health, therapy, and medication management across both homes.

Findings

- Medical information doesn't always reach both homes on time.

Recommendations

- Ask providers to send appointment summaries to both parents; keep an emergency-info sheet in the child's bag.

Section 4: Daily-Care Consistency

Rating: Good

Whether your home offers stable, predictable, developmentally-appropriate daily care.

Findings

- Most routines in your home are consistent, with some drift.

Recommendations

- Pick one anchor routine (bedtime) and keep it identical for 30 days.

Section 5: Transition Support

Rating: Fair

Exchanges, transportation, and how well your child adjusts between homes.

Findings

- Transitions are a recurring source of stress.

Recommendations

- Move exchanges to a neutral or school-based location; add visual warnings 24 hours before each exchange.

Section 6: Communication

Rating: Needs Improvement

Timely, accurate, child-focused information sharing between homes.

Findings

- Communication frequently escalates or breaks down before important information is shared.

Recommendations

- Move all non-emergency communication to a written, timestamped channel.
- Consider working with a Parenting Facilitator or mediator to establish communication ground rules.

Section 7: Decision-Making

Rating: Good

How well parents make and resolve decisions about the child.

Findings

- Most decisions get made but the process is sometimes ad-hoc.

Recommendations

- Adopt a written decision-resolution ladder (share records ? professional input ? mediation).

Section 8: Event Participation

Rating: Excellent

School events and extracurriculars - attendance, coordination, and child-first behaviour.

Findings

- Events are handled child-first, without conflict.

Recommendations

- Keep the child out of any adult negotiation about attendance.

Section 9: Resource Coordination

Rating: Fair

Financial, insurance, and service coordination that keeps care flowing.

Findings

- Financial coordination is causing occasional gaps in the child's services.

Recommendations

- Separate the money question from the child-need question; agree on a written expense procedure.

Recommended next steps

- Move all non-emergency communication to a written, timestamped channel.
- Ask providers to send appointment summaries to both parents; keep an emergency-info sheet in the child's bag.
- Move exchanges to a neutral or school-based location; add visual warnings 24 hours before each exchange.
- Separate the money question from the child-need question; agree on a written expense procedure.

This report is an educational reflection tool from SA CoParents. It is not a diagnosis, custody evaluation, or legal advice. Findings are based on your own self-assessment answers on a 5-point scale across nine special-needs co-parenting sections.