Recommended Communication Pathway

TIER 2 · STRUCTURED WRITTEN

Structured written communication is the safest starting point.

Based on Jane's responses, direct verbal or in-person communication with the other parent is not recommended at this time. A monitored written channel reduces reactive escalation and preserves a record of coordination decisions.

- Use OurFamilyWizard, TalkingParents, or a similar co-parenting app for schedule, medical, and school updates.
- Avoid live phone or in-person exchanges for the next 90 days.
- Route emotionally-charged topics through a mediator, therapist, or attorney — not directly.
- Re-take this assessment every 90 days to track whether conditions are changing.

Section 1 — Immediate Safety Screen (past 12 months)

Has the other parent ever physically hurt you or threatened to hurt you?	No
Has the other parent ever used a weapon or threatened you with one?	No
Do you fear for your safety when interacting with the other parent?	Yes
Has the other parent controlled who you can see, where you can go, or your finances?	Yes
Has the other parent stalked, monitored, or repeatedly contacted you against your wishes?	Yes
Has any child in your care been harmed or been present during a violent event?	No
Is there a current protective or restraining order in place?	No

Section 2 — Communication Readiness

Can you set clear limits with the other parent without conflict escalating?	Rarely
Does the other parent respect written boundaries you have set?	Rarely
Are conversations about the child usually kept focused on the child?	Sometimes
Do you feel emotionally safe raising a concern about the child with the other parent?	No
Have you and the other parent ever resolved a disagreement about the child successfully?	Occasionally
Do you have a support system (therapist, attorney, friend) you can call after difficult exchanges?	Yes
Is a neutral third party currently helping coordinate parenting decisions?	No
Are you willing to shift to a monitored written channel for the next 90 days?	Yes

Interpretation

Jane's Section 1 answers surface patterns consistent with coercive control — fear, monitoring, and prior controlling behaviour — without recent physical violence or an active protective order. Her Section 2 answers indicate that boundary-setting and emotional safety with the other parent are currently very difficult, but a strong personal support system exists and she is open to structured written communication.

This combination places her in the Tier 2 — Structured Written pathway rather than a No-Direct-Contact recommendation. If Section 1 answers change (e.g. any "Yes" on physical harm, weapons, or child harm), the pathway would automatically escalate to Tier 4 — No direct contact — and Jane should immediately consult a family-violence-trained attorney.

Recommended Next Steps

1. Move all coordination onto a written co-parenting app.
   Set up OurFamilyWizard or TalkingParents this week. Route every schedule, medical, and school topic through the app. Delete direct SMS threads that turn hostile.
   This week

2. Consult a family-law attorney trained in coercive control.
   Because Section 1 surfaced control/monitoring patterns, an attorney can help you document, plan safe exchanges, and evaluate whether a protective order is warranted.
   Within 14 days

3. Build a safety plan with a DV advocate.
   Call Family Violence Prevention Services (210-733-8810) or the National DV Hotline. A trained advocate will help you build a personalised safety plan and, if needed, plan a safe exit.
   Within 7 days

4. Consider a Parenting Coordinator for high-stakes decisions.
   A neutral PC can hold decisions about school, medical care, and vacations when direct discussion is unsafe. Ask your attorney or the Texas Association of Mediators for a referral.
   Within 30 days

5. Re-take this assessment every 90 days.
   Communication safety changes with the situation. Regular re-assessment tracks whether the pathway should escalate or ease over time.

How this report was generated

This assessment adapts questions from the Danger Assessment (Campbell, 1986) and the HITS screening tool (Sherin et al., 1998). Scoring is deterministic and rule-based; no AI classification is used to assign a pathway. Any “Yes” response on the Section 1 immediate-safety questions triggers a stricter pathway regardless of Section 2 answers.

This is a screening tool, not a risk assessment. It should not be used in court proceedings without accompanying professional evaluation. See sacoparentsapp.online/methodology for the full scoring rules.
